2009 LONDON MASTERCLASS Q & A SHEET

Q:	A:
WHAT was this event?	A Masterclass tasting held in London to further assist the members of the Gimblett Gravels Winegrowers Association (GGWA) to benchmark their finest wines against wines considered to be the reference as “the best in class, in the world.”
WHEN was this event?	Thursday 19 February 2009
WHERE was the event held?	Rooftop Penthouse, New Zealand House, London.
WHY was this event called a ‘MasterClass’ rather than a ‘Challenge’ or ‘Competition’?	This was not a sanctioned challenge or competition purely because the GGWA had only ever undertaken one previous benchmarking exercise (Taupo, NZ, late 2008). This event was held to build upon the Taupo exercise and also to expose the wines to a wider assembly of recognised ‘Bordeaux educated’ palates. The underlying rationale is the GGWA members’ ongoing desire for continuous improvement and to develop wines within a context of ‘best practise’ as demonstrated by wines acknowledged as the world’s finest.
WHICH wines were tasted?	Six wines were selected from each region: 2005 BORDEAUX, France Château Angelus, St Émilion Château Cos d’Estournel, St Estèphe Château Haut-Brion, Pessac-Leognan Château Lafite Rothschild, Pauillac Château Mouton Rothschild, Pauillac Vieux Château Certan, Pomerol 2006 HAWKE’S BAY, New Zealand Craggy Range, The Quarry, Gimblett Gravels Mills Reef, Elspeth Cabernet Sauvignon, Gimblett Gravels Newton Forrest, Cornerstone, Gimblett Gravels Sacred Hill, Helmsman, Gimblett Gravels Trinity Hill, The Gimblett, Gimblett Gravels Villa Maria, Reserve Cabernet Merlot, Gimblett Gravels

Q:

HOW were the wines selected?

WHO selected the wines?

WHO led the Masterclass panel?

WHO attended the Masterclass?

A:

Each flight of wines was selected separately to ensure that the six considered 'best of class' was chosen for each region in an independent and fair manner.

The Bordeaux wines were selected by Alun Griffiths, Master of Wine and Wine Director for Berry Bros & Rudd of London, the UK's oldest wine merchants with royal appointment. Alun was independently proposed to select the Bordeaux wines and his choices were determined based on a request by GGWA for classed growth quality 2005 vintage wines representative of their respective communes.

The Gimblett Gravels wines were selected by James Halliday MW. James is a highly respected wine critic and vigneron based in Australia and was co-panel leader at the 2008 Taupo Masterclass. He chose wines in a blind tasting from a selection of 2005 and 2006 vintage Merlot and /or Cabernet Sauvignon predominant wines presented by members of the GGWA.

GIMBLETT GRAVELS WINEGROWERS ASSOCIATION 2009 LONDON MASTERCLASS Q & A SHEET

HOW was the Masterclass conducted?

The event was held as a double-blind tasting. Event convenor, Geoff Wilson, who is also the GGWA Executive Officer, was the only person at the tasting that knew the entire selection of the two flights of wine.

Participants tasted the wines and, without obligation, were invited to submit their top 6 ranked wines in order of preference.

After the tasting, the panel leaders led discussion on the 12 numbered wines and advised how they had individually rated each wine.

Once the scores had been collected, the wines were revealed, without reference to the order with which they were tasted, and further discussion was undertaken.

Finally the wines were individually identified against their tasting order and the aggregated panel scores given.

WHAT scores were allocated?

A total of 18 score sheets were submitted. It is important to note that, in the interests of achieving a completely impartial result, the rankings of those participants connected with the arranging of the event were not included towards the overall ranking.

IF this tasting was mainly undertaken by a group with palates highly-attuned to Bordeaux wines, was this reflected in the results?

It was evident that the Bordeaux specialists present sought first and foremost to identify the Bordeaux wines. Whilst this did not prove completely impossible, almost all present agreed that the task had been much more difficult than initially envisaged.

WHAT is the relevance of the exercise for the Gimblett Gravels wines?

This is primarily about the ongoing development of the GGWA member wineries who all take this class of wines seriously and wish to work towards being considered as one of the world's premier wine producing districts particularly in terms of Bordeaux-style blends, as well as Syrah, Chardonnay and a number of other speciality varieties.

WHAT is the impact of the exercise for Hawke's Bay wines?

The Hawke's Bay is New Zealand's second largest wine-growing region and produces a broad variety of wine types and styles. The full-bodied red wine category is the world's highest in value and these results prove that the Hawke's Bay is rapidly heading toward an exciting future.

It should be noted that the Gimblett Gravels represents less than 3% of the national NZ vineyard, or around 16.5% of the Hawke's Bay Regional vineyard.

2009 LONDON MASTERCLASS Q & A SHEET

Q:

WHAT is the overall effect of this outcome for New Zealand wines and why has this been called a 'Tipping point' for New Zealand red wines?

WAS there a chance that this event could have ended up illustrating a great divide between the two flights of wine, suggesting that the Gimblett Gravels wines were not comparable with the Bordeaux wines?

WHAT comes next?

A:

In key export markets such as the UK, China, USA, and a number of other significant wine markets, the highest value wines, the wines that are cellared and in many cases appreciate in value, are within the full-bodied red (or "Bordeaux-style blend") category. For many years NZ production was overlooked for a number of reasons, not the least of which was vine age and viticultural management.

To even be considered in the same tasting as the best from Bordeaux illustrates major progress. To have been favourably scored at such an event means that these wines are now considered as a high-quality product by the palates that matter.

The common expression 'things could have turned pear-shaped', was a very real possibility as the selected Bordeaux wines represent the very best from their region, further strengthened by their selection from one of the very best recent vintages.

The risk for the Gimblett Gravels wines was somewhat mitigated by the "Taupo Surprise" where a small group gathered around two internationally renowned critics in the first masterclass of its type. On that occasion 4 of the 6 top rated wines were Gimblett Gravels.

The GGWA is very keen to continue to benchmark their wines against other great wines around the world.

This will likely mean that further similar masterclasses will be held and these will likely involve variance in the tasting panels, vintages and other renowned regions such as Napa Valley.

There is also the likelihood that the two flights of wines tasted in London will be set aside and tasted in ten or so years' time to assess how well they have aged.
